THE CRITIC

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY

LONDON
WILLIAM HEINEMANN
1905

INTRODUCTION.

IN order to understand The Critic aright, it is necessary to bear in mind what had been done in the way of tragical burlesque during the preceding hundred years. In 1671 London had been excessively amused by the originality of the Duke of Buckingham's Rehearsal, a play written to mimic and satirise the extravagant fury of language employed by the fashionable tragic poets of that day. Like The Critic, The Rehearsal was a play within a play, or rather a tragedy within a farce, and great pains were taken by the actor Lacy to imitate the gestures and dress, as well as the words, of Dryden, who (as Mr. Bayes) held the same position as Puff does in The Critic. The latter production could very well have been described in the terms with which the prologue to The Rehearsal opens :

“ We might well call this short mock-play of ours
A posy made of weeds instead of flowers ;
Yet such have been presented to your noses,
And there are some, I fear, who thought them roses.”

It is a curious proof of the vitality of the weeds which The Rehearsal tried to pull up, that sixty years later there were still audiences who “thought them roses.” The Duke of Buckingham had made fun in 1671 of the prodigious rant in Dryden's rhymed tragedies, and in 1730 Fielding laughed at precisely the same plays in his wild burlesque of Tom Thumb. This farce was successful, and Fielding enlarged it by an act, bringing it out the next year as Tragedy of Tragedies; or, the Life and Death of Tom Thumb the Great. It was written in stilted blank verse with passages of still more bombastic rhyme, and was accompanied by ridiculous critical "prolegomena," attributed to famous scholars like Bentley and Dennis. This was followed in 1734 by Henry Carey's Chrononhotonthologos, "the most tragical tragedy that ever was tragedized by any company of tragedians." This turgid farce, which was the funniest thing of its kind which had been seen on the English stage, enjoyed an immense success, and was still a popular favourite when Sheridan found himself at the head of the Drury Lane management.

In composing The Critic, Sheridan owed something to each of the predecessors we have mentioned. From Buckingham he borrowed the happy artifice of bringing the author and his friends on the stage to witness the blundering rehearsal of a tragedy. From Fielding he took the preposterous treatment of a parody of national history, and from Carey the rich flow of bombastic verse. But he produced something which surpassed all these in the elements of laughable theatrical entertainment. The Critic may be described as a summing-up of all that previous comic poets had done in the burlesquing of tragedy. The farces of Buckingham and Fielding had parodied actual lines and passages, familiar to all spectators in the popular tragedies of Dryden and Banks, Nat Lee and James Thomson. But soon after 1730 these tragedies began to go out of fashion, and there was no longer any point in ridiculing special scenes in The Earl of Essex and Busiris to audiences who had never sat through those buckram dramas. This was Carey's intuition; and in Chrononhotonthologos he parodied the whole class of inflated plays, not specimens from any one of them.

The Rehearsal had never ceased to be a popular piece at the London theatres, but it is not to be doubted that Sheridan perceived the danger to which it was becoming exposed. Quick observer that he was, he must have noticed that people laughed languidly at the bombast of Drawcansir, now that they were no longer familiar with those heroes of Dryden's of which Drawcansir was the comic representative. He determined to write a sort of renovated Rehearsal, in which people should still see the ridiculous side of over-strained tragical language, but in which they should not be puzzled by allusions which were intelligible only to an older generation. He succeeded completely in his purpose, for though at first some elderly playgoers felt themselves taken in by this new burlesque, and, like Horace Walpole, complained "that it was wondrously flat and old, and a poor imitation," younger spectators gratefully accepted it. Sheridan's experiment was seen to be completely successful when an attempt was made to revive the original Rehearsal; as John Adolphus has recorded in his interesting memoirs, to an audience familiar with The Critic "Buckingham's farce now seemed rather like a blurred imitation of Sheridan than a representation of the original from which that great wit had drawn his idea."

The precise circumstance which led Sheridan to write his burlesque does not seem to be known. But it may have been connected with the successive failures at Drury Lane of Zingis and Sethona, tragedies by Alexander Dow, a Scotch Colonel of Bengal infantry. The second of these had been endured until a character came forward to the footlights and entreated the audience to listen to a long story of—which was too much for the risible faculties of the pit.

"How 'gainst the Nirons the bold Naimans stood,
And red Taxartes foam'd with Omrahs' blood,"

But it is probable that what opened Sheridan's eyes still more completely to the dangers of "high-class" poetical drama was the failure, at his own theatre, of Miss Hannah More's Fatal Falsehood, a tragedy of the most flatulent character, for which the author of The Critic had written a witty prologue all in vain. A contemporary reviewer described these pieces, in language scarcely less tumid than their own, as being characterised by "humour without magnificence, and circumlocution untinged by poetry." Another thing which had certainly amused and exasperated Sheridan was the correspondence between Cumberland and Garrick with regard to the Battle of Hastings, a dreadful national drama by the former, which had been played for a night or two at Drury Lane in 1778. Cumberland had been so foolish as to complain to Garrick that Sheridan had yawned when he was reading him this tragedy, and he went on to say: "It gave me not the slightest offence, as I put it all to the habit of dissipation and indolence, but I fear his office [of manager] will suffer from want of due attention." This is so thoroughly in the spirit of Sir Fretful Plagiary that we may be certain that Garrick had shown Sheridan Cumberland's tactless letter, and that they had laughed over it together.

Sir Fretful Plagiary is so brilliant a creation, and lends so much life to the early part of The Critic, that it is necessary to dwell a little upon his prototype. Richard Cumberland is well-nigh forgotten now, but in 1779 he was a person of great prominence and activity. He was a politician, a diplomatist, a civil servant, and a playwright, and in each of these departments he acquired, for a time, a substantial success. In the last-mentioned, he is credited in the Biographia Dramatica with the preparation of no fewer than fifty-four plays, among which one at least, the comedy of The West Indian, is, or ought to be, almost a classic. But Cumberland had the misfortune to offend the wits by certain pompous frailties of character, and, in particular, when he allowed his jealousy of Sheridan to be paraded in public, he committed intellectual suicide. Posterity has forgotten all about Cumberland's secret embassy to the court of Spain, and his epic poems, and his conduct of the Board of Trade, and even his half-century of plays, but it has remembered that he was Sir Fretful Plagiary, and that, being so silly as to be envious of success in others, he had to "go and vent his philosophy in anonymous abuse of all modern critics and authors." There is perhaps no other example of the absolute destruction of a reputation by ridicule so complete as that of Cumberland's by the picture of Sir Fretful Plagiary.

Garrick may have laughed over the inception of The Critic, but he did not live to see it completed. He died on the 20th of January 1779, and Sheridan's burlesque was brought out on the 30th of October following. As usual, the author was not ready to time, and on the 28th he had not written the third act. The joint-managers were beside themselves; the actors gazed at one another in dismay. Linley had an idea which was a stroke of genius; he and King took Sheridan on some excuse into the small green-room, where they had set out pens and paper, two bottles of claret and a dish of anchovy sandwiches. When Sheridan's attention was withdrawn for a moment, the conspirators popped out of the room, turned the key in the lock, and informed him through the keyhole that he would be detained a prisoner there until the MS. of The Critic was finished. It was in these conditions of duress that some of the most entertaining passages in all dramatic literature were composed, including the splendid "discovery-scene" of Tom Jenkins and the Justice's Lady, and the not less admirable entrance of Tilburina and Confidante, "mad, according to custom."

Sheridan's dislike to the publication of his plays, which had led him to refuse altogether to print either The School for Scandal or The Duenna, extended to his burlesque as well, but after some delay he consented to issue what appears to have been a privately printed edition of The Critic in 1781. This volume, which has a pretty engraved title-page, with a vignette of the masks of Tragedy and Comedy, is extremely rare, and its genuineness would be doubted did not a copy exist presented by the author himself, with an inscription, to a relative of the Duke of Marlborough. It is probable that this little book was brought out to protect the text against the shoal of miserable catch-penny piracies which were printed in 1779 and 1780 by people who carried away by ear all of the farce which they could remember, and invented the rest.

EDMUND GOSSE.

TO MRS. GREVILLE.

MADAM,—In requesting your permission to address the following pages to you, which, as they aim themselves to be critical, require every protection and allowance that approving taste or friendly prejudice can give them, I yet ventured to mention no other motive than the gratification of private friendship and esteem. Had I suggested a hope that your implied approbation would give a sanction to their defects, your particular reserve and dislike to the reputation of critical taste, as well as of poetical talent, would have made you refuse the protection of your name to such a purpose. However, I am not so ungrateful as now to attempt to combat this disposition in you. I shall not here presume to argue that the present state of poetry claims and expects every assistance that taste and example can afford it; nor endeavour to prove that a fastidious concealment of the most elegant productions of judgment and fancy is an ill return for the possession of those endowments. Continue to deceive yourself in the idea that you are known only to be eminently admired and regarded for the valuable qualities that attach private friendships, and the graceful talents that adorn conversation. Enough of what you have written has stolen into full public notice to answer my purpose; and you will, perhaps, be the only person, conversant in elegant literature, who shall read this address and not perceive that by publishing your particular approbation of the following drama, I have a more interested object than to boast the true respect and regard with which I have the honour to be, madam, your very sincere and obedient humble servant,

R. B. SHERIDAN.

THE CRITIC

OR, A TRAGEDY REHEARSED.

A DRAMATIC PIECE IN THREE ACTS.

PROLOGUE

BY THE HONOURABLE RICHARD FITZPATRICK.

THE sister muses, whom these realms obey,
Who o'er the drama hold divided sway,
Sometimes, by evil counsellors, 'tis said,
Like earth-born potentates have been misled.
In those gay days of wickedness and wit,
When Villiers criticised what Dryden writ,
The tragic queen, to please a tasteless crowd,
Had learn'd to bellow, rant, and roar so loud,
That frighten'd Nature, her best friend before,
The blustering beldam's company forswore ;
Her comic sister, who had wit, 'tis true,
With all her merits, had her failings too ;
And would sometimes in mirthful moments use
A style too flippant for a well-bred muse ;
Then female modesty abash'd began
To seek the friendly refuge of the fan,
Awhile behind that slight entrenchment stood,
Till, driven from thence, she left the stage for good.

In our more pious and far chaster times,
These sure no longer are the muse's crimes !
But some complain that, former faults to shun,
The reformation to extremes has run.
The frantic hero's wild delirium past,
Now insipidity succeeds bombast ;
So slow Melpomene's cold numbers creep,
Here dulness seems her drowsy court to keep,
And we are scarce awake, whilst you are fast asleep.
Thalia, once so ill-behaved and rude,
Reform'd, is now become an arrant prude ;
Retailing nightly to the yawning pit
The purest morals, undefiled by wit !
Our author offers, in these motley scenes,
A slight remonstrance to the drama's queens :
Nor let the goddesses be over nice ;
Free-spoken subjects give the best advice.
Although not quite a novice in his trade,
His cause to-night requires no common aid.
To this, a friendly, just, and powerful court,
I come ambassador to beg support.
Can he undaunted brave the critic's rage ?
In civil broils with brother bards engage ?
Hold forth their errors to the public eye,
Nay more, e'en newspapers themselves defy ?
Say, must his single arm encounter all ?
By numbers vanquish'd, e'en the brave may fall ;
And though no leader should success distrust,
Whose troops are willing, and whose cause is just ;
To bid such hosts of angry foes defiance,
His chief dependence must be, your alliance.

■

ACT THE FIRST.

SCENE I.

A Room in DANGLE's House.

MR. and MRS. DANGLE discovered at breakfast, and reading newspapers.

DANG. [Reading.] Brutus to Lord North.—Letter the second on the State of the Army—Psha! To the first L dash D of the A dash Y.—Genuine extract of a Letter from St. Kitt's.—Coxheath Intelligence.—It is now confidently asserted that Sir Charles Hardy—Psha! nothing but about the fleet and the nation! and I hate all politics but theatrical politics. Where's the Morning Chronicle?

MRS. DANG. Yes, that's your Gazette.

DANG. So, here we have it. [Reads.] Theatrical intelligence extraordinary.—We hear there is a new tragedy in rehearsal at Drury Lane Theatre, called "The Spanish Armada," said to be written by Mr. Puff, a gentleman well known in the theatrical world. If we may allow ourselves to give credit to the report of the performers, who, truth to say, are in general but indifferent judges, this piece abounds with the most striking and received beauties of modern composition. So! I am very glad my friend Puff's tragedy is in such forwardness. Mrs. Dangle, my dear, you will be very glad to hear that Puff's tragedy—

MRS. DANG. Lord, Mr. Dangle, why will you plague me about such nonsense? Now the plays are begun I shall have no peace. Isn't it sufficient to make yourself ridiculous by your passion for the theatre, without continually teasing me to join you? Why can't you ride your hobby-horse without desiring to place me on a pillion behind you, Mr. Dangle?

DANG. Nay, my dear, I was only going to read——

MRS. DANG. No, no; you will never read anything that's worth listening to. You hate to hear about your country; there are letters every day with Roman signatures, demonstrating the certainty of an invasion, and proving that the nation is utterly undone. But you never will read anything to entertain one.

DANG. What has a woman to do with politics, Mrs. Dangle?

MRS. DANG. And what have you to do with the theatre, Mr. Dangle? Why should you affect the character of a critic? I have no patience with you!—haven't you made yourself the jest of all your acquaintance by your interference in matters where you have no business? Are you not called a theatrical Quidnunc, and a mock Mæcenas to second-hand authors?

DANG. True; my power with the managers is pretty notorious. But is it no credit to have applications from all quarters for my interest—from lords to recommend fiddlers, from ladies to get boxes, from authors to get answers, and from actors to get engagements?

MRS. DANG. Yes, truly; you have contrived to get a share in all the plague and trouble of theatrical property, without the profit, or even the credit of the abuse that attends it.

DANG. I am sure, Mrs. Dangle, you are no loser by it, however; you have all the advantages of it. Mightn't you, last winter, have had the reading of the new pantomime a fortnight previous to its performance? And doesn't Mr. Fosbrook let you take places for a play before it is advertised, and set you down for a box for every new piece through the season? And didn't my friend Mr. Smatter dedicate his last farce to you at my particular request, Mrs. Dangle?

MRS. DANG. Yes; but wasn't the farce damned, Mr. Dangle? And to be sure it is extremely pleasant to have one's house made the motley rendezvous of all the lackeys of literature; the very high 'Change of trading authors and jobbing critics? Yes, my drawing-room is an absolute register-office for candidate actors, and poets without character. Then to be continually alarmed with misses and ma'ams piping hysteric changes on Juliets and Dorindas, Pollys and Ophelias; and the very furniture trembling at the probationary starts and unprovoked rants of would-be Richards and Hamlets! And what is worse than all, now that the manager has monopolised the Opera House, haven't we the signors and signoras calling here, sliding their smooth semi-breves, and gargling glib divisions in their outlandish throats—with foreign emissaries and French spies, for aught I know, disguised like fiddlers and figure-dancers?

DANG. Mercy! Mrs. Dangle!

MRS. DANG. And to employ yourself so idly at such an alarming crisis as this, too—when, if you had the least spirit, you would have been at the head of one of the Westminster associations—or trailing a volunteer pike in the Artillery Ground! But you—o' my conscience, I believe, if the French were landed to-morrow, your first inquiry would be whether they had brought a theatrical troop with them.

DANG. Mrs. Dangle, it does not signify—I say the stage is the Mirror of Nature, and the actors are the Abstract and brief Chronicles of the Time: and pray what can a man of sense study better? Besides, you will not easily persuade me that there is no credit or importance in being at the head of a band of critics, who take upon them to decide for the whole town, whose opinion and patronage all writers solicit, and whose recommendation no manager dares refuse.

MRS. DANG. Ridiculous! Both managers and authors of the least merit laugh at your pretensions. The public is their critic—without whose fair approbation they know no play can rest on the stage, and with whose applause they welcome such attacks as yours, and laugh at the malice of them, where they can't at the wit.

DANG. Very well, madam—very well!

Enter SERVANT.

SER. Mr. Sneer, sir, to wait on you.

DANG. Oh, show Mr. Sneer up. [Exit SERVANT.]
Plague on't, now we must appear loving and affectionate, or Sneer will hitch us into a story.

MRS. DANG. With all my heart; you can't be more ridiculous than you are.

DANG. You are enough to provoke——

Enter SNEER.

Ha! my dear Sneer, I am vastly glad to see you.
My dear, here's Mr. Sneer.

MRS. DANG. Good morning to you, sir.

DANG. Mrs. Dangle and I have been diverting ourselves with the papers. Pray, Sneer, won't you go to Drury Lane Theatre the first night of Puff's tragedy?

SNEER. Yes; but I suppose one shan't be able to get in, for on the first night of a new piece they always fill the house with orders to support it. But here, Dangle, I have brought you two pieces, one of which you must exert yourself to make the managers accept, I can tell you that; for 'tis written by a person of consequence.

DANG. So! now my plagues are beginning.

SNEER. Ay, I am glad of it, for now you'll be happy. Why, my dear Dangle, it is a pleasure to see how you enjoy your volunteer fatigue, and your solicited solicitations.

DANG. It's a great trouble—yet, egad, it's pleasant too. Why, sometimes of a morning I have a dozen people call on me at breakfast-time, whose faces I never saw before, nor ever desire to see again.

SNEER. That must be very pleasant, indeed!

DANG. And not a week but I receive fifty letters, and not a line in them about any business of my own.

SNEER. An amusing correspondence!

DANG. [Reading.] Bursts into tears, and exit.
What, is this a tragedy?

SNEER. No, that's a genteel comedy, not a translation—only taken from the French: it is written in a style which they have lately tried to run down; the true sentimental, and nothing ridiculous in it from the beginning to the end.

MRS. DANG. Well, if they had kept to that, I should not have been such an enemy to the stage; there was some edification to be got from those pieces, Mr. Sneer!

SNEER. I am quite of your opinion, Mrs. Dangle: the theatre, in proper hands, might certainly be made the school of morality: but now, I am sorry to say it, people seem to go there principally for their entertainment!

MRS. DANG. It would have been more to the credit of the managers to have kept it in the other line.

SNEER. Undoubtedly, madam ; and hereafter perhaps to have had it recorded, that in the midst of a luxurious and dissipated age, they preserved two houses in the capital, where the conversation was always moral at least, if not entertaining !

DANG. Now, egad, I think the worst alteration is in the nicety of the audience ! No double-entendre, no smart innuendo admitted ; even Vanbrugh and Congreve obliged to undergo a bungling reformation !

SNEER. Yes, and our prudery in this respect is just on a par with the artificial bashfulness of a courtesan, who increases the blush upon her cheek in an exact proportion to the diminution of her modesty.

DANG. Sneer can't even give the public a good word ! But what have we here ? This seems a very odd——

SNEER. Oh, that's a comedy, on a very new plan ; replete with wit and mirth, yet of a most serious moral ! You see it is called The Reformed House-breaker ; where, by the mere force of humour, housebreaking is put into so ridiculous a light, that if the piece has its proper run, I have no doubt but that bolts and bars will be entirely useless by the end of the season.

DANG. Egad, this is new, indeed !

SNEER. Yes ; it is written by a particular friend of mine, who has discovered that the follies and foibles of society are subjects unworthy the notice of the comic muse, who should be taught to stoop only at the greater vices and blacker crimes of humanity—gibbeting capital offences in five acts, and pillorying petty larcenies in two. In short, his idea is to dramatise the penal laws, and make the stage a court of ease to the Old Bailey.

DANG. It is truly moral.

Re-enter SERVANT.

SER. Sir Fretful Plagiary, sir.

DANG. Beg him to walk up. [Exit SERVANT.]
Now, Mrs. Dangle, Sir Fretful Plagiary is an author to your own taste.

MRS. DANG. I confess he is a favourite of mine, because everybody else abuses him.

SNEER. Very much to the credit of your charity, madam, if not of your judgment.

DANG. But, egad, he allows no merit to any author but himself, that's the truth on't—though he's my friend.

SNEER. Never. He is as envious as an old maid verging on the desperation of six-and-thirty; and then the insidious humility with which he seduces you to give a free opinion on any of his works, can be exceeded only by the petulant arrogance with which he is sure to reject your observations.

DANG. Very true, egad—though he's my friend.

SNEER. Then his affected contempt of all newspaper strictures ; though, at the same time, he is the sorest man alive, and shrinks like scorched parchment from the fiery ordeal of true criticism : yet is he so covetous of popularity, that he had rather be abused than not mentioned at all.

DANG. There's no denying it—though he is my friend.

SNEER. You have read the tragedy he has just finished, haven't you ?

DANG. Oh yes ; he sent it to me yesterday.

SNEER. Well, and you think it execrable, don't you ?

DANG. Why, between ourselves, egad, I must own—though he is my friend—that it is one of the most—— He's here—[Aside]—finished and most admirable perform—

SIR FRET. [Without.] Mr. Sneer with him, did you say ?

Enter SIR FRETFUL PLAGIARY.

DANG. Ah, my dear friend ! Egad, we were just speaking of your tragedy. Admirable, Sir Fretful, admirable !

SNEER. You never did anything beyond it, Sir Fretful—never in your life.

SIR FRET. You make me extremely happy ; for, without a compliment, my dear Sneer, there isn't a man in the world whose judgment I value as I do yours and Mr. Dangle's.

MRS. DANG. They are only laughing at you, Sir Fretful ; for it was but just now that——

DANG. Mrs. Dangle! Ah, Sir Fretful, you know Mrs. Dangle. My friend Sneer was rallying just now—he knows how she admires you, and——

SIR FRET. O Lord, I am sure Mr. Sneer has more taste and sincerity than to——[Aside.] A damned double-faced fellow!

DANG. Yes, yes—Sneer will jest—but a better humoured——

SIR FRET. Oh, I know——

DANG. He has a ready turn for ridicule—his wit costs him nothing.

SIR FRET. No, egad—or I should wonder how he came by it. [Aside.]

MRS. DANG. Because his jest is always at the expense of his friend. [Aside.]

DANG. But, Sir Fretful, have you sent your play to the managers yet?—or can I be of any service to you?

SIR FRET. No, no, I thank you: I believe the piece had sufficient recommendation with it. I thank you though. I sent it to the manager of Covent Garden Theatre this morning.

SNEER. I should have thought, now, that it might have been cast (as the actors call it) better at Drury Lane.

SIR FRET. O Lud! no—never send a play there while I live—hark'ee! [Whispers SNEER.]

SNEER. Writes himself! I know he does.

SIR FRET. I say nothing—I take away from no man's merit—am hurt at no man's good fortune—

I say nothing. But this I will say—through all my knowledge of life, I have observed—that there is not a passion so strongly rooted in the human heart as envy.

SNEER. I believe you have reason for what you say, indeed.

SIR FRET. Besides—I can tell you it is not always so safe to leave a play in the hands of those who write themselves.

SNEER. What, they may steal from them, hey, my dear Plagiary?

SIR FRET. Steal!—to be sure they may; and, egad, serve your best thoughts as gipsies do stolen children—disfigure them to make 'em pass for their own.

SNEER. But your present work is a sacrifice to Melpomene, and he, you know, never——

SIR FRET. That's no security; a dexterous plagiarist may do anything. Why, sir, for aught I know, he might take out some of the best things in my tragedy, and put them into his own comedy.

SNEER. That might be done, I dare be sworn.

SIR FRET. And then, if such a person gives you the least hint or assistance, he is devilish apt to take the merit of the whole——

DANG. If it succeeds.

SIR FRET. Ay, but with regard to this piece, I think I can hit that gentleman, for I can safely swear he never read it.

SNEER. I'll tell you how you may hurt him more.

SIR FRET. How?

SNEER. Swear he wrote it.

SIR FRET. Plague on't, now, Sneer, I shall take it ill! I believe you want to take away my character as an author.

SNEER. Then I am sure you ought to be very much obliged to me.

SIR FRET. Hey!—sir——

DANG. Oh, you know, he never means what he says.

SIR FRET. Sincerely then—you do like the piece?

SNEER. Wonderfully!

SIR FRET. But come now, there must be something that you think might be mended, hey? Mr. Dangle, has nothing struck you?

DANG. Why, faith, it is but an ungracious thing, for the most part, to——

SIR FRET. With most authors it is just so, indeed; they are in general strangely tenacious! But, for my part, I am never so well pleased as when a judicious critic points out any defect to me; for what is the purpose of showing a work to a friend, if you don't mean to profit by his opinion?

SNEER. Very true. Why, then, though I seriously admire the piece upon the whole, yet there is one small objection; which, if you'll give me leave, I'll mention.

SIR FRET. Sir, you can't oblige me more.

SNEER. I think it wants incident.

SIR FRET. Good God ! you surprise me ! Wants incident !

SNEER. Yes ; I own I think the incidents are too few.

SIR FRET. Good God ! Believe me, Mr. Sneer, there is no person for whose judgment I have a more implicit deference. But I protest to you, Mr. Sneer, I am only apprehensive that the incidents are too crowded. My dear Dangle, how does it strike you ?

DANG. Really I can't agree with my friend Sneer. I think the plot quite sufficient ; and the first four acts by many degrees the best I ever read or saw in my life. If I might venture to suggest anything, it is that the interest rather falls off in the fifth.

SIR FRET. Rises, I believe you mean, sir.

DANG. No, I don't, upon my word.

SIR FRET. Yes, yes, you do, upon my soul !—it certainly don't fall off, I assure you. No, no ; it don't fall off.

DANG. Now, Mrs. Dangle, didn't you say it struck you in the same light ?

MRS. DANG. No, indeed, I did not—I did not see a fault in any part of the play, from the beginning to the end.

SIR FRET. Upon my soul, the women are the best judges after all !

MRS. DANG. Or, if I made any objection, I am sure it was to nothing in the piece, but that I was afraid it was, on the whole, a little too long.

SIR FRET. Pray, madam, do you speak as to duration of time; or do you mean that the story is tediously spun out?

MRS. DANG. O Lud! no. I speak only with reference to the usual length of acting plays.

SIR FRET. Then I am very happy—very happy indeed—because the play is a short play, a remarkably short play. I should not venture to differ with a lady on a point of taste; but on these occasions, the watch, you know, is the critic.

MRS. DANG. Then, I suppose, it must have been Mr. Dangle's drawling manner of reading it to me.

SIR FRET. Oh, if Mr. Dangle read it, that's quite another affair! But I assure you, Mrs. Dangle, the first evening you can spare me three hours and a half, I'll undertake to read you the whole from beginning to end, with the prologue and epilogue, and allow time for the music between the acts.

MRS. DANG. I hope to see it on the stage next.

DANG. Well, Sir Fretful, I wish you may be able to get rid as easily of the newspaper criticisms as you do of ours.

SIR FRET. The newspapers! Sir, they are the most villainous—licentious—abominable—infernal—Not that I ever read them—no—I make it a rule never to look into a newspaper.

DANG. You are quite right; for it certainly must hurt an author of delicate feelings to see the liberties they take.

SIR FRET. No, quite the contrary! this abuse is in fact, the best panegyric—I like it of all things. An author's reputation is only in danger from their support.

SNEER. Why, that's true—and that attack, now, on you the other day——

SIR FRET. What? where?

DANG. Ay, you mean in a paper of Thursday: it was completely ill-natured, to be sure.

SIR FRET. Oh, so much the better. Ha! ha! ha! I wouldn't have it otherwise.

DANG. Certainly it is only to be laughed at; for——

SIR FRET. You don't happen to recollect what the fellow said, do you?

SNEER. Pray, Dangle—Sir Fretful seems a little anxious——

SIR FRET. O Lud! no—anxious!—not I, not the least. I—but one may as well hear, you know.

DANG. Sneer, do you recollect? [Aside to SNEER.] Make out something.

SNEER. [Aside to DANGLE.] I will. [Aloud.] Yes, yes, I remember perfectly.

SIR FRET. Well, and pray now—not that it signifies—what might the gentleman say?

SNEER. Why, he roundly asserts that you have not the slightest invention or original genius whatever; though you are the greatest traducer of all other authors living.

SIR FRET. Ha! ha! ha!—very good!

SNEER. That as to comedy, you have not one idea of your own, he believes, even in your common-place-book—where stray jokes and pilfered witticisms are kept with as much method as the ledger of the lost and stolen office.

SIR FRET. Ha! ha! ha!—very pleasant!

SNEER. Nay, that you are so unlucky as not to have the skill even to steal with taste: but that you glean from the refuse of obscure volumes, where more judicious plagiarists have been before you; so that the body of your work is a composition of dregs and sediments—like a bad tavern's worst wine.

SIR FRET. Ha! ha!

SNEER. In your more serious efforts, he says, your bombast would be less intolerable, if the thoughts were ever suited to the expression; but the homeliness of the sentiment stares through the fantastic encumbrance of its fine language, like a clown in one of the new uniforms.

SIR FRET. Ha! ha!

SNEER. That your occasional tropes and flowers suit the general coarseness of your style, as tannour sprigs would a ground of linsey-woolsey; while your imitations of Shakespeare resemble the mimicry of Falstaff's page, and are about as near the standard of the original.

SIR FRET. Ha!

SNEER. In short, that even the finest passages you steal are of no service to you; for the poverty of your own language prevents their assimilating; so that they lie on the surface like lumps of marl on a barren moor, encumbering what it is not in their power to fertilise!

SIR FRET. [After great agitation.] Now, another person would be vexed at this.

SNEER. Oh! but I wouldn't have told you—only to divert you.

SIR FRET. I know it—I am diverted. Ha! ha! ha!—not the least invention! Ha! ha! ha! very good!—very good!

SNEER. Yes—no genius! ha! ha! ha!

DANG. A severe rogue! ha! ha! ha! But you are quite right, Sir Fretful, never to read such nonsense.

SIR FRET. To be sure—for if there is anything to one's praise, it is a foolish vanity to be gratified at it; and, if it is abuse—why, one is always sure to hear of it from one damned good-natured friend or another!

Enter SERVANT.

SER. Sir, there is an Italian gentleman, with a French interpreter, and three young ladies, and a dozen musicians, who say they are sent by Lady Rondeau and Mrs. Fugue.

DANG. Gadso! they come by appointment! Dear

Mrs. Dangle, do let them know I'll see them directly.

MRS. DANG. You know, Mr. Dangle, I shan't understand a word they say.

DANG. But you hear there's an interpreter.

MRS. DANG. Well, I'll try to endure their complaisance till you come. [Exit.

SER. And Mr. Puff, sir, has sent word that the last rehearsal is to be this morning, and that he'll call on you presently.

DANG. That's true—I shall certainly be at home. [Exit SERVANT.] Now, Sir Fretful, if you have a mind to have justice done you in the way of answer, egad, Mr. Puff's your man.

SIR FRET. Psha! Sir, why should I wish to have it answered, when I tell you I am pleased at it?

DANG. True, I had forgot that. But I hope you are not fretted at what Mr. Sneer——

SIR FRET. Zounds! no, Mr. Dangle; don't I tell you these things never fret me in the least?

DANG. Nay, I only thought——

SIR FRET. And, let me tell you, Mr. Dangle, 'tis damned affronting in you to suppose that I am hurt when I tell you I am not.

SNEER. But why so warm, Sir Fretful?

SIR FRET. Gad's life! Mr. Sneer, you are as absurd as Dangle: how often must I repeat it to you, that nothing can vex me but your supposing it possible for me to mind the damned nonsense you have been repeating to me!—and, let me tell you, if you continue to believe this, you must mean to insult me, gentlemen—and then, your disrespect will affect me no more than the newspaper criticisms—and I shall treat it with exactly the same calm indifference and philosophic contempt—and so your servant. [Exit.

SNEER. Ha! ha! ha! poor Sir Fretful! Now will he go and vent his philosophy in anonymous abuse of all modern critics and authors. But, Dangle, you must get your friend Puff to take me to the rehearsal of his tragedy.

DANG. I'll answer for't, he'll thank you for desiring it. But come and help me to judge of this musical family: they are recommended by people of consequence, I assure you.

SNEER. I am at your disposal the whole morning: but I thought you had been a decided critic in music as well as in literature.

DANG. So I am—but I have a bad ear. I' faith, Sneer, though, I am afraid we were a little too severe on Sir Fretful—though he is my friend.

SNEER. Why, 'tis certain that unnecessarily to mortify the vanity of any writer is a cruelty which mere dulness never can deserve; but where a base and personal malignity usurps the place of literary emulation, the aggressor deserves neither quarter nor pity.

DANG. That's true, egad! though he's my friend!

SCENE II.

A Drawing-room in DANGLE's House.

MRS. DANGLE, SIGNOR PASTICCIO RITORNELLO, SIGNORE PASTICCIO RITORNELLO, INTERPRETER, and MUSICIANS, discovered.

INTERP. Je dis, madame, j'ai l'honneur to introduce et de vous demander votre protection pour le Signor Pasticcio Ritornello et pour sa charmante famille.

SIGNOR PAST. Ah! vosignoria, noi vi preghiamo di favoritevi colla vostra protezione.

1 SIGNORA PAST. Vosignoria fatevi questi grazie.

2 SIGNORA PAST. Si, Signora.

INTERP. Madame—me interpret. C'est à dire—in English—qu'ils vous prient de leur faire l'honneur——

MRS. DANG. I say again, gentlemen, I don't understand a word you say.

SIGNOR PAST. Questo signore spiegherò——

INTERP. Oui—me interpret. Nous avons les lettres de recommandation pour Monsieur Dangle de——

MRS. DANG. Upon my word, sir, I don't understand you.

SIGNOR PAST. La contessa Rondeau è nostra padrona.

3 SIGNORA PAST. Si, padre, et miladi Fugue.

INTERP. Oh!—me interpret. Madame, ils disent —in English—qu'ils ont l'honneur d'être protégés de ces dames. You understand?

MRS. DANG. No, sir—no understand!

Enter DANGLE and SNEER.

INTERP. Ah, voici Monsieur Dangle!

ALL ITALIANS. Ah! Signor Dangle!

MRS. DANG. Mr. Dangle, here are two very civil gentlemen trying to make themselves understood, and I don't know which is the interpreter.

DANG. Eh, bien!

[The INTERPRETER and SIGNOR PASTICCIO here speak at the same time.]

INTERP. Monsieur Dangle, le grand bruit de vos talens pour la critique, et de votre intérêt avec messieurs les directeurs à tous les théâtres——

SIGNOR PAST. Vosignoria siete si famoso par la vostra conoscenza, e vostra interessa colla le direttore da——

DANG. Egad, I think the interpreter is the hardest to be understood of the two!

SNEER. Why, I thought, Dangle, you had been an admirable linguist!

DANG. So I am, if they would not talk so damned fast.

SNEER. Well, I'll explain that—the less time we lose in hearing them the better—for that, I suppose, is what they are brought here for.

[Speaks to SIGNOR PASTICCIO—they sing trios, &c.]

DANGLE beating out of time.

Enter SERVANT and whispers D NGLE.

DANG. Show him up. [Exit SERVANT.] Bravo! admirable! bravissimo! admirablissimo! Ah! Sneer! where will you find voices such as these in England?

SNEER. Not easily.

DANG. But Puff is coming. Signor and little signoras obligatissimo! Sposa Signora Dangelena. Mrs. Dangle, shall I beg you to offer them some refreshments, and take their address in the next room.

[Exit MRS. DANGLE with SIGNOR PASTICCIO, SIGNORE PASTICCIO, MUSICIANS, and INTERPRETER, ceremoniously.

Re-enter SERVANT.

SER. Mr. Puff, sir.

[Exit.

Enter PUFF.

DANG. My dear Puff!

PUFF. My dear Dangle, how is it with you?

DANG. Mr. Sneer, give me leave to introduce Mr. Puff to you.

PUFF. Mr. Sneer is this? Sir, he is a gentleman whom I have long panted for the honour of knowing—a gentleman whose critical talents and transcendent judgment——

SNEER. Dear sir——

DANG. Nay, don't be modest, Sneer; my friend Puff only talks to you in the style of his profession.

SNEER. His profession !

PUFF. Yes, sir ; I make no secret of the trade I follow : among friends and brother authors, Dangle knows I love to be frank on the subject, and to advertise myself vivá voce. I am, sir, a practitioner in panegyric, or to speak more plainly, a professor of the art of puffing, at your service—or anybody else's.

SNEER. Sir, you are very obliging ! I believe, Mr. Puff, I have often admired your talents in the daily prints.

PUFF. Yes, sir, I flatter myself I do as much business in that way as any six of the fraternity in town. Devilish hard work all the summer, friend Dangle—never worked harder ! But, hark'ee—the winter managers were a little sore, I believe.

DANG. No ; I believe they took it all in good part.

PUFF. Ay ! then that must have been affectation in them ; for, egad, there were some of the attacks which there was no laughing at !

SNEER. Ay, the humorous ones. But I should think, Mr. Puff, that authors would in general be able to do this sort of work for themselves.

PUFF. Why, yes—but in a clumsy way. Besides, we look on that as an encroachment, and so take the opposite side. I dare say, now, you conceive half the very civil paragraphs and advertisements you see to be written by the parties concerned, or their friends? No such thing: nine out of ten manufactured by me in the way of business.

SNEER. Indeed!

PUFF. Even the auctioneers, now—the auctioneers, I say—though the rogues have lately got some credit for their language—not an article of the merit theirs: take them out of their pulpits, and they are as dull as catalogues! No, sir; 'twas I first enriched their style—'twas I first taught them to crowd their advertisements with panegyrical superlatives, each epithet rising above the other, like the bidders in their own auction-rooms! From me they learned to inlay their phraseology with variegated chips of exotic metaphor; by me, too, their inventive faculties were called forth—yes, sir, by me they were instructed to clothe ideal walls with gratuitous fruits—to insinuate obsequious rivulets into visionary groves—to teach courteous shrubs to nod their approbation of the grateful soil; or on emergencies to raise upstart oaks where there never had been an acorn; to create a delightful vicinage without the assistance of a neighbour; or fix the temple of Hygeia in the fens of Lincolnshire!

DANG. I am sure you have done them infinite service; for now, when a gentleman is ruined, he parts with his house with some credit.

SNEER. Service! if they had any gratitude, they would erect a statue to him; they would figure him as a presiding Mercury, the god of traffic and fiction, with a hammer in his hand instead of a caduceus. But pray, Mr. Puff, what first put you on exercising your talents in this way?

PUFF. Egad, sir, sheer necessity!—the proper parent of an art so nearly allied to invention. You must know, Mr. Sneer, that from the first time I tried my hand at an advertisement, my success was such, that for some time after I led a most extraordinary life indeed!

SNEER. How, pray?

PUFF. Sir, I supported myself two years entirely by my misfortunes.

SNEER. By your misfortunes!

PUFF. Yes, sir, assisted by long sickness, and other occasional disorders; and a very comfortable living I had of it.

SNEER. From sickness and misfortunes! You practised as a doctor and an attorney at once?

PUFF. No, egad! both maladies and miseries were my own.

SNEER. Hey! what the plague!

DANG. 'Tis true, i' faith.

PUFF. Hark'ee! By advertisements—To the charitable and humane! and To those whom Providence hath blessed with affluence!

SNEER. Oh, I understand you.

PUFF. And, in truth, I deserved what I got; for I suppose never man went through such a series of calamities in the same space of time. Sir, I was five times made a bankrupt, and reduced from a state of affluence, by a train of unavoidable misfortunes: then, sir, though a very industrious tradesman, I was twice burned out, and lost my little all both times: I lived upon those fires a month. I soon after was confined by a most excruciating disorder, and lost the use of my limbs: that told very well; for I had the case strongly attested, and went about to collect the subscriptions myself.

DANG. Egad, I believe that was when you first called on me.

PUFF. In November last? Oh no; I was at that time a close prisoner in the Marshalsea, for a debt benevolently contracted to serve a friend. I was afterwards twice tapped for a dropsy, which declined into a very profitable consumption. I was then reduced to—oh no,—then, I became a widow with six helpless children, after having had eleven husbands pressed, and being left every time eight months gone with child, and without money to get me into an hospital!

SNEER. And you bore all with patience, I make no doubt?

PUFF. Why, yes; though I made some occasional attempts at felo de se; but as I did not find those rash actions answer, I left off killing myself very soon. Well, sir, at last, what with bankruptcies, fires, gouts, dropsies, imprisonments, and other valuable calamities, having got together a pretty handsome sum, I determined to quit a business which had always gone rather against my conscience, and in a more liberal way still to indulge my talents for fiction and embellishments, through my favourite channels of diurnal communication—and so, sir, you have my history.

SNEER. Most obligingly communicative, indeed ! and your confession, if published, might certainly serve the cause of true charity, by rescuing the most useful channels of appeal to benevolence from the cant of imposition. But surely, Mr. Puff, there is no great mystery in your present profession ?

PUFF. Mystery, sir ! I will take upon me to say the matter was never scientifically treated nor reduced to rule before.

SNEER. Reduced to rule !

PUFF. O Lud ! sir, you are very ignorant, I am afraid ! Yes, sir, puffing is of various sorts ; the principal are, the puff direct, the puff preliminary, the puff collateral, the puff collusive, and the puff oblique, or puff by implication. These all assume, as circumstances require, the various forms of Letter to the Editor, Occasional Anecdote, Impartial Critique, Observation from Correspondent, or Advertisement from the Party.

SNEER. The puff direct, I can conceive——

PUFF. Oh yes, that's simple enough ! For instance—a new comedy or farce is to be produced at one of the theatres (though, by-the-bye, they don't bring out half what they ought to do)—the author, suppose Mr Smatter, or Mr. Dapper, or any particular friend of mine—very well; the day before it is to be performed, I write an account of the manner in which it was received; I have the plot from the author, and only add—"Characters strongly drawn—highly coloured—hand of a master—fund of genuine humour—mine of invention—neat dialogue—Attic salt." Then for the performance—"Mr. Dodd was astonishingly great in the character of Sir Harry. That universal and judicious actor, Mr. Palmer, perhaps never appeared to more advantage than in the colonel; but it is not in the power of language to do justice to Mr. King: indeed, he more than merited those repeated bursts of applause which he drew from a most brilliant and judicious audience. As to the scenery—the miraculous powers of Mr. de Louthembourg's pencil are universally acknowledged. In short, we are at a loss which to admire most, the unrivalled genius of the author, the great attention and liberality of the managers, the wonderful abilities of the painter, or the incredible exertions of all the performers."

SNEER. That's pretty well, indeed, sir.

PUFF. Oh, cool!—quite cool!—to what I sometimes do.

SNEER. And do you think there are any who are influenced by this?

PUFF. O Lud! yes, sir. The number of those who undergo the fatigue of judging for themselves is very small indeed.

SNEER. Well, sir, the puff preliminary?

PUFF. Oh that, sir, does well in the form of a caution. In a matter of gallantry now—Sir Flimsy Gossamer wishes to be well with Lady Fanny Fete—he applies to me—I open trenches for him with a paragraph in the Morning Post: “It is recommended to the beautiful and accomplished Lady F four stars F dash E to be on her guard against that dangerous character, Sir F dash G; who, however pleasing and insinuating his manners may be, is certainly not remarkable for the constancy of his attachments!” —in italics. Here, you see, Sir Flimsy Gossamer is introduced to the particular notice of Lady Fanny, who perhaps never thought of him before—she finds herself publicly cautioned to avoid him, which naturally makes her desirous of seeing him; the observation of their acquaintance causes a pretty kind of mutual embarrassment; this produces a sort of sympathy of interest, which if Sir Flimsy is unable to improve effectually, he at least gains the credit of having their names mentioned together by a particular set, and in a particular way—which nine times out of ten is the full accomplishment of modern gallantry.

DANG. Egad, Sneer, you will be quite an adept in the business!

PUFF. Now, sir, the puff collateral is much used as an appendage to advertisements, and may take the form of anecdote: “Yesterday, as the celebrated George Bonmot was sauntering down St.

James's Street, he met the lively Lady Mary Myrtle coming out of the park : ' Good God, Lady Mary, I'm surprised to meet you in a white jacket—for I expected never to have seen you, but in a full-trimmed uniform and a light horseman's cap ! ' ' Heavens, George, where could you have learned that ? ' ' Why,' replied the wit, ' I just saw a print of you, in a new publication called the Camp Magazine ; which, by-the-bye, is a devilish clever thing, and is sold at No. 3, on the right hand of the way, two doors from the printing-office, the corner of Ivy Lane, Paternoster Row, price only one shilling.' "

SNEER. Very ingenious indeed !

PUFF. But the puff collusive is the newest of any ; for it acts in the disguise of determined hostility. It is much used by bold booksellers and enterprising poets : " An indignant correspondent observes, that the new poem called ' Beelzebub's Cotillon ; or, Proserpine's Fête Champêtre,' is one of the most unjustifiable performances he ever read. The severity with which certain characters are handled is quite shocking ; and as there are many descriptions in it too warmly coloured for female delicacy, the shameful avidity with which this piece is bought by all people of fashion is a reproach on the taste of the times, and a disgrace to the delicacy of the age." Here you see the two strongest inducements are held forth ; first, that nobody ought to read it ; and secondly, that everybody buys it ; on the strength of which the publisher boldly prints the tenth edition, before he had sold ten of the first ; and then establishes it by threatening himself with the pillory, or absolutely indicting himself for scan. mag.

DANG. Ha ! ha ! ha !—'gad I know it is so.

PUFF. As to the puff oblique, or puff by implication, it is too various and extensive to be illustrated by an instance : it attracts in titles and presumes in patents ; it lurks in the limitation of a subscription, and invites in the assurance of crowd and incommodation at public places ; it delights to draw forth concealed merit, with a most disinterested assiduity ; and sometimes wears a countenance of smiling censure and tender reproach. It has a wonderful memory for parliamentary debates, and will often give the whole speech of a favoured member with the most flattering accuracy. But, above all, it is a great dealer in reports and suppositions. It has the earliest intelligence of intended preferments that will reflect honour on the patrons ; and embryo promotions of modest gentlemen, who know nothing of the matter themselves. It can hint a ribbon for implied services in the air of a common report ; and with the carelessness of a casual paragraph, suggest officers into commands, to which they have no pretension but their wishes. This, sir, is the last principal class of the art of puffing—an art which I hope you will now agree with me is of the highest dignity, yielding a tabla-ture of benevolence and public spirit ; befriending equally trade, gallantry, criticism, and politics : the applause of genius—the register of charity—the triumph of heroism—the self-defence of contractors—the fame of orators—and the gazette of ministers.

SNEER. Sir, I am completely a convert both to the importance and ingenuity of your profession ; and now, sir, there is but one thing which can possibly increase my respect for you, and that is, your permitting me to be present this morning at the rehearsal of your new tragedy——

PUFF. Hush, for Heaven's sake ! My tragedy ! Egad, Dangle, I take this very ill : you know how apprehensive I am of being known to be the author.

DANG. I' faith I would not have told—but it's in the papers, and your name at length in the Morning Chronicle.

PUFF. Ah ! those damned editors never can keep a secret. Well, Mr. Sneer, no doubt you will do me great honour—I shall be infinitely happy—highly flattered——

DANG. I believe it must be near the time—shall we go together ?

PUFF. No ; it will not be yet this hour, for they are always late at that theatre. Besides, I must meet you there, for I have some little matters here to send to the papers, and a few paragraphs to scribble before I go. [Looking at memorandums.] Here is A Conscientious Baker, on the subject of the Army Bread ; and A Detester of Visible Brickwork, in favour of the New-invented Stucco ; both in the style of Junius, and promised for to-morrow. The Thames navigation, too, is at a stand. Misomud or Anti-shoal must go to work again directly. Here, too, are some political memorandums—I see ; ay—To take Paul Jones, and get the Indiamen out of the Shannon—reinforce Byron—compel the Dutch to—so ! I must do that in the evening papers, or reserve it for the Morning Herald ; for I know that I have undertaken to-morrow, besides, to establish the unanimity of the fleet in the Public Advertiser, and to shoot Charles Fox in the Morning Post. So, egad, I han't a moment to lose !

DANG. Well, we'll meet in the green-room.

[Exeunt severally.]

ACT THE SECOND.

SCENE I.

The Theatre, before the Curtain.

Enter DANGLE, PUFF, and SNEER.

PUFF. No, no, sir ; What Shakespeare says of actors may be better applied to the purpose of plays : they ought to be the abstract and brief chronicles of the time. Therefore, when history, and particularly the history of our own country, furnishes anything like a case in point, to the time in which an author writes, if he knows his own interest, he will take advantage of it; so, sir, I call my tragedy "The Spanish Armada," and have laid the scene before Tilbury Fort.

SNEER. A most happy thought, certainly!

DANG. Egad, it was—I told you so. But pray, now, I don't understand how you have contrived to introduce any love into it.

PUFF. Love! Oh, nothing so easy! for it is a received point among poets, that where history gives you a good heroic outline for a play, you may fill up with a little love at your own discretion; in doing which, nine times out of ten, you only make up a deficiency in the private history of the times. Now, I rather think I have done this with some success.

SNEER. No scandal about Queen Elizabeth, I hope?

PUFF. O Lud! no, no; I only suppose the governor of Tilbury Fort's daughter to be in love with the son of the Spanish admiral.

SNEER. Oh, is that all?

DANG. Excellent, i' faith! I see at once. But won't this appear rather improbable?

PUFF. To be sure it will—but what the plague! a play is not to show occurrences that happen every day, but things just so strange, that though they never did, they might happen.

SNEER. Certainly, nothing is unnatural that is not physically impossible.

PUFF. Very true—and for that matter Don Ferolo Whiskerandos, for that's the lover's name, might have been over here in the train of the Spanish Ambassador; or Tilburina, for that is the lady's name, might have been in love with him, from having heard his character, or seen his picture, or from knowing that he was the last man in the world she ought to be in love with—or for any other good female reason. However, sir, the fact is, that though she is but a knight's daughter, egad! she is in love like any princess!

DANG. Poor young lady! I feel for her already! for I can conceive how great the conflict must be between her passion and her duty, her love for her country and her love for Don Ferolo Whiskerandos!

PUFF. Oh, amazing! Her poor susceptible heart is swayed to and fro by contending passions like——

Enter UNDER PROMPTER.

UND. PROMP. Sir, the scene is set, and everything is ready to begin, if you please.

PUFF. Egad, then we'll lose no time.

UND. PROMP. Though I believe, sir, you will find it very short, for all the performers have profited by the kind permission you granted them.

PUFF. Hey! what?

UND. PROMP. You know, sir, you gave them leave to cut out or omit whatever they found heavy or unnecessary to the plot, and I must own they have taken very liberal advantage of your indulgence.

PUFF. Well, well. They are in general very good judges, and I know I am luxuriant. Now, Mr. Hopkins, as soon as you please.

UND. PROMP. [To the ORCHESTRA.] Gentlemen, will you play a few bars of something, just to——

PUFF. Ay, that's right; for as we have the scenes and dresses, egad, we'll go to't as if it was the first night's performance—but you need not mind stopping between the acts. [Exit UNDER PROMPTER. ORCHESTRA play—then the bell rings.] So! stand clear, gentlemen. Now, you know, there will be a cry of "Down! down!—Hats off!—Silence!" Then up curtain, and let us see what our painters have done for us. [Curtain rises.]

SCENE II.

Tilbury Fort.

"Two SENTINELS discovered asleep."

DANG. Tilbury Fort!—very fine indeed!

PUFF. Now, what do you think I open with?

SNEER. Faith, I can't guess——

PUFF. A clock. Hark! [Clock strikes.] I open with a clock striking, to beget an awful attention in the audience. It also marks the time, which is four o'clock in the morning, and saves a description of the rising sun, and a great deal about gilding the eastern hemisphere.

DANG. But, pray, are the sentinels to be asleep?

PUFF. Fast as watchmen.

SNEER. Isn't that odd, though, at such an alarming crisis?

PUFF. To be sure it is—but smaller things must give way to a striking scene at the opening; that's a rule. And the case is, that two great men are coming to this very spot to begin the piece. Now, it is not to be supposed they would open their lips if these fellows were watching them; so, egad, I must either have sent them off their posts or set them asleep.

SNEER. Oh, that accounts for it. But tell us, who are these coming?

PUFF. These are they—Sir Walter Raleigh and Sir Christopher Hatton. You'll know Sir Christopher by his turning out his toes—famous, you know, for his dancing. I like to preserve all the little traits of character. Now attend.

“Enter SIR WALTER RALEIGH and SIR CHRISTOPHER HATTON.”

SIR CHRIST. True, gallant Raleigh!—”

DANG. What, they had been talking before?

PUFF. Oh yes; all the way as they came along. [To the ACTORS.] I beg pardon, gentlemen, but these are particular friends of mine, whose remarks may be of great service to us. [To SNEER and DANGLE.] Don't mind interrupting them whenever anything strikes you.

“SIR CHRIST. True, gallant Raleigh !
But oh, thou champion of thy country's fame,
There is a question which I yet must ask :
A question which I never ask'd before—
What mean these mighty armaments ?
This general muster ? and this throng of chiefs ?”

SNEER. Pray, Mr. Puff, how came Sir Christopher
Hatton never to ask that question before ?

PUFF. What, before the play began ? How the plague could he ?

DANG. That's true, i' faith !

PUFF. But you will hear what he thinks of the matter.

“SIR CHRIST. Alas ! my noble friend, when I behold
Yon tented plains in martial symmetry
Array'd ; when I count o'er yon glittering lines
Of crested warriors, where the proud steeds neigh
And valour-breathing trumpet's shrill appeal,
Responsive vibrate on my listening ear ;
When virgin majesty herself I view,
Like her protecting Pallas, veil'd in steel,
With graceful confidence exhort to arms !
When, briefly, all I hear or see bears stamp
Of martial vigilance and stern defence,
I cannot but surmise—forgive, my friend,
If the conjecture's rash—I cannot but Surmise the state some danger apprehends !”

SNEER. A very cautious conjecture that.

PUFF. Yes, that's his character; not to give an opinion but on secure grounds. Now then.

"SIR WALT. O most accomplish'd Christopher!—"

PUFF. He calls him by his Christian name, to show that they are on the most familiar terms.

"SIR WALT. O most accomplish'd Christopher! I find
Thy staunch sagacity still tracks the future,
In the fresh print of the o'ertaken past."

PUFF. Figurative!

"SIR WALT. Thy fears are just.

SIR CHRIST. But where? whence? when? and what
The danger is—methinks I fain would learn.

SIR WALT. You know, my friend, scarce two revolving suns,
And three revolving moons, have closed
their course,
Since haughty Philip, in despite of peace,
With hostile hand hath struck at England's trade.

SIR CHRIST. I know it well.

SIR WALT. Philip, you know, is proud Iberia's king!

SIR CHRIST. He is.

SIR WALT. His subjects in base bigotry
And Catholic oppression held; while we,
You know, the Protestant persuasion hold.

SIR CHRIST. We do.

SIR WALT. You know, beside, his boasted armament,
The famed Armada, by the Pope baptized,
With purpose to invade these realms—

SIR CHRIST. Is sailed,
Our last advices so report.

SIR WALT. While the Iberian admiral's chief hope,
His darling son—

SIR CHRIST. Ferolo Whiskerandos hight—

SIR WALT. The same—by chance a prisoner hath been ta'en,
And in this fort of Tilbury——

SIR CHRIST. Is now
Confin'd—'tis true, and oft from yon tall turret's top
I've mark'd the youthful Spaniard's haughty mien—
Unconquer'd, though in chains.

SIR WALT. You also know——”

DANG. Mr. Puff, as he knows all this, why does Sir Walter go on telling him?

PUFF. But the audience are not supposed to know anything of the matter, are they?

SNEER. True; but I think you manage ill: for there certainly appears no reason why Sir Walter should be so communicative.

PUFF. 'Fore Gad, now, that is one of the most ungrateful observations I ever heard!—for the less inducement he has to tell all this, the more, I think, you ought to be obliged to him; for I am sure you'd know nothing of the matter without it.

DANG. That's very true, upon my word.

PUFF. But you will find he was not going on.

“SIR CHRIST. Enough, enough—'tis plain—and I no more Am in amazement lost!——”

PUFF. Here, now, you see, Sir Christopher did not in fact ask any one question for his own information.

SNEER. No, indeed; his has been a most disinterested curiosity!

DANG. Really, I find we are very much obliged to them both.

PUFF. To be sure you are. Now then for the commander-in-chief, the Earl of Leicester, who, you know, was no favourite but of the queen's. We left off—in amazement lost!

“SIR CHRIST. Am in amazement lost!
But, see where noble Leicester comes!
supreme
In honours and command.

SIR WALT. And yet, methinks,
At such a time, so perilous, so fear'd,
That staff might well become an abler grasp.

SIR CHRIST. And so, by Heaven! think I; but soft, he's here!”

PUFF. Ay, they envy him!

SNEER. But who are these with him?

PUFF. Oh! very valiant knights: one is the governor of the fort, the other the master of the horse. And now, I think, you shall hear some better language. I was obliged to be plain and intelligible in the first scene, because there was so much matter-of-fact in it; but now, i' faith, you have trope, figure, and metaphor, as plenty as noun-substantives.

“Enter EARL OF LEICESTER, GOVERNOR, MASTER OF THE HORSE, KNIGHTS, &c.

LEIC. How's this, my friends! is't thus your new-fledged zeal
And plumèd valour moulds in roosted sloth?
Why dimly glimmers that heroic flame,

Whose reddening blaze, by patriot spirit fed,
Should be the beacon of a kindling realm?
Can the quick current of a patriot heart
Thus stagnate in a cold and weedy converse
Or freeze in tideless inactivity?
No! rather let the fountain of your valour
Spring through each stream of enterprise,
Each petty channel of conducive daring,
Till the full torrent of your foaming wrath
O'erwhelm the flats of sunk hostility."

PUFF. There it is—followed up!

"SIR WALT. No more!—the freshening breath of thy rebuke

Hath fill'd the swelling canvas of our souls!
And thus, though fate should cut the cable of [All take hands.

Our topmost hopes, in friendship's closing line

We'll grapple with despair, and if we fall,
We'll fall in glory's wake!

LEIC. There spoke old England's genius!
Then, are we all resolved?

ALL. We are—all resolved?

LEIC. To conquer—or be free?

ALL. To conquer, or be free.

LEIC. All?

ALL. All."

DANG. Nem. con., egad!

PUFF. Oh yes!—where they do agree on the stage, their unanimity is wonderful!

"LEIC. Then let's embrace—and now—— [Kneels."

SNEER. What the plague! is he going to pray?

PUFF. Yes; hush!—in great emergencies, there is nothing like a prayer.

“LEIC. O mighty Mars!”

DANG. But why should he pray to Mars?

PUFF. Hush!

“LEIC. If in thy homage bred,
Each point of discipline I’ve still observed;
Nor but by due promotion, and the right
Of service, to the rank of major-general
Have risen; assist thy votary now!

Gov. Yet do not rise—hear me! [Kneels.

MAST. And me! [Kneels.

KNIGHT. And me! [Kneels.

SIR WALT. And me! [Kneels.

SIR CHRIST. And me! [Kneels.”

PUFF. Now pray all together.

“ALL. Behold thy votaries submissive beg,
That thou wilt deign to grant them all they ask;
Assist them to accomplish all their ends,
And sanctify whatever means they use
To gain them!”

SNEER. A very orthodox quintetto!

PUFF. Vastly well, gentlemen! Is that well managed or not? Have you such a prayer as that on the stage?

SNEER. Not exactly.

LEIC. [To PUFF.] But, sir, you haven’t settled how we are to get off here.

PUFF. You could not go off kneeling, could you?

Sir Walt. [To PUFF.] Oh no, sir; impossible!

PUFF. It would have a good effect, i' faith, if you could exeunt praying! Yes, and would vary the established mode of springing off with a glance at the pit.

SNEER. Oh, never mind, so as you get them off! I'll answer for it, the audience won't care how.

PUFF. Well then, repeat the last line standing, and go off the old way.

“ALL. And sanctify whatever means we use
To gain them. [Exeunt.”

DANG. Bravo! a fine exit.

SNEER. Well, really, Mr. Puff——

PUFF. Stay a moment!

“The SENTINELS get up.

1 SENT. All this shall to Lord Burleigh's ear.

2 SENT. 'Tis meet it should. [Exeunt.”

DANG. Hey!—why, I thought those fellows had been asleep?

PUFF. Only a pretence; there's the art of it: they were spies of Lord Burleigh's.

SNEER. But isn't it odd they never were taken notice of, not even by the commander-in-chief?

PUFF. O Lud, sir! if people, who want to listen or overhear, were not always connived at in a tragedy, there would be no carrying on any plot in the world.

DANG. That's certain!

PUFF. But take care, my dear Dangle! the morning gun is going to fire. [Cannon fires.

DANG. Well, that will have a fine effect !

PUFF. I think so, and helps to realise the scene.
[Cannon twice.] What the plague ! three morning guns ! there never is but one ! Ay, this is always the way at the theatre : give these fellows a good thing, and they never know when to have done with it. You have no more cannon to fire ?

UND. PROMP. [Within.] No, sir.

PUFF. Now then, for soft music.

SNEER. Pray, what's that for ?

PUFF. It shows that Tilburina is coming—nothing introduces you a heroine like soft music. Here she comes !

DANG. And her confidante, I suppose ?

PUFF. To be sure ! Here they are—inconsolable to the minuet in Ariadne ! [Soft music.

“ Enter TILBURINA and CONFIDANTE.

TILB. Now has the whispering breath of gentle morn
Bid Nature's voice and Nature's beauty rise ;
While orient Phœbus, with unborrow'd hues,
Clothes the waked loveliness which all night slept

In heavenly drapery ! Darkness is fled.
Now flowers unfold their beauties to the sun,
And, blushing, kiss the beam he sends to wake them—

The striped carnation, and the guarded rose,
The vulgar wallflower, and smart gillyflower,
The polyanthus mean—the dapper daisy,
Sweet-william, and sweet marjoram—and all
The tribe of single and of double pinks !

Now, too, the feather'd warblers tune their notes Around, and charm the listening grove. The lark !

The linnet ! chaffinch ! bullfinch ! goldfinch !
greenfinch !

But oh, to me no joy can they afford !
Nor rose, nor wallflower, nor smart gillyflower,
Nor polyanthus mean, nor dapper daisy,
Nor William sweet, nor marjoram—nor lark,
Linnet, nor all the finches of the grove !”

PUFF. Your white handkerchief, madam !——

TILB. I thought, sir, I wasn't to use that till heart-rending woe.

PUFF. Oh yes, madam, at the finches of the grove, if you please.

“TILB.

Nor lark,

Linnet, nor all the finches of the grove !

[Weeps.”

PUFF. Vastly well, madam !

DANG. Vastly well, indeed !

“TILB. For, oh, too sure, heart-rending woe is now
The lot of wretched Tilburina !”

DANG. Oh ! 'tis too much !

SNEER. Oh ! it is indeed !

“CON. Be comforted, sweet lady ; for who knows, But Heaven has yet some milk-white day in store ?

TILB. Alas ! my gentle Nora,
Thy tender youth as yet hath never mourn'd Love's fatal dart. Else wouldst thou know, that when
The soul is sunk in comfortless despair,
It cannot taste of merriment.”

DANG. That's certain !

"CON. But see where your stern father comes :
It is not meet that he should find you thus."

PUFF. Hey, what the plague ! what a cut is here !
Why, what is become of the description of her first meeting with Don Whiskerandos—his gallant behaviour in the sea fight—and the simile of the canary-bird ?

TILB. Indeed, sir, you'll find they will not be missed.

PUFF. Very well, very well !

TILB. [To CONFIDANTE.] The cue, ma'am, if you please.

"CON. It is not meet that he should find you thus.

TILB. Thou counsel'st right ; but 'tis no easy task
For barefaced grief to wear a mask of joy.

Enter GOVERNOR.

Gov. How's this !—in tears ? O Tilburina, shame :
Is this a time for maudling tenderness,
And Cupid's baby woes ? Hast thou not heard
That haughty Spain's pope-consecrated fleet
Advances to our shores, while England's fate,
Like a clipp'd guinea, trembles in the scale ?

TILB. Then is the crisis of my fate at hand !
I see the fleets approach—I see——"

PUFF. Now pray, gentlemen, mind. This is one of the most useful figures we tragedy writers have,
by which a hero or heroine, in consideration of their being often obliged to overlook things that are on the stage, is allowed to hear and see a number of things that are not.

SNEER. Yes ; a kind of poetical second-sight !

PUFF. Yes. Now then, madam.

“TILB.

I see their decks

Are clear'd !—I see the signal made !

The line is formed !—a cable's length asunder !—

I see the frigates station'd in the rear ;

And now, I hear the thunder of the guns !

I hear the victors' shouts !—I also hear

The vanquish'd groan !—and now 'tis smoke—and now

I see the loose sails shiver in the wind !

I see—I see—what soon you'll see——

Gov. Hold, daughter ! peace ! this love hath turned thy brain !

The Spanish fleet thou canst not see—because —It is not yet in sight !”

DANG. Egad, though, the governor seems to make no allowance for this poetical figure you talk of.

PUFF. No, a plain matter-of-fact man ; that's his character.

“TILB. But will you, then, refuse his offer ?

Gov. I must—I will—I can—I ought—I do.

TILB. Think what a noble price.

Gov. No more—you urge in vain.

TILB. His liberty is all he asks.”

SNEER. All who asks, Mr. Puff ? Who is——

PUFF. Egad, sir, I can't tell ! Here has been such cutting and slashing, I don't know where they have got to myself.

TILB. Indeed, sir, you will find it will connect very well.

“—And your reward secure.”

PUFF. Oh, if they hadn't been so devilish free with their cutting here, you would have found that Don Whiskerandos has been tampering for his liberty, and has persuaded Tilburina to make this proposal to her father. And now, pray observe the conciseness with which the argument is conducted. Egad, the pro and con goes as smart as hits in a fencing-match. It is, indeed, a sort of small-sword logic, which we have borrowed from the French.

“TILB. A retreat in Spain!

Gov. Outlawry here!

TILB. Your daughter's prayer!

Gov. Your father's oath.

TILB. My lover!

Gov. My country!

TILB. Tilburina!

Gov. England!

TILB. A title!

Gov. Honour!

TILB. A pension!

Gov. Conscience!

TILB. A thousand pounds!

Gov. Ha! thou hast touched me nearly!”

PUFF. There you see—she threw in Tilburina, Quick, parry, quarte with England! Ha! thrust in tierce a title!—parried by honour. Ha! a pension over the arm!—put by by conscience. Then flankonade with a thousand pounds—and a palpable hit, egad!

“TILB. Canst thou—

Reject the suppliant, and the daughter too.

Gov. No more ; I would not hear thee plead in vain :
The father softens—but the governor
Is fix'd ! [Exit.]

DANG. Ay, that antithesis of persons is a most established figure.

“TILB. 'Tis well,—hence then, fond hopes—fond passion, hence ;

Duty, behold I am all over thine——

WHISK. [Without.] Where is my love—my——

TILB. Ha !

Enter DON FEROLLO WHISKERANDOS.

WHISK. My beauteous enemy !——”

PUFF. Oh dear, ma'am, you must start a great deal more than that ! Consider, you had just determined in favour of duty—when, in a moment, the sound of his voice revives your passion—overthrows your resolution—destroys your obedience. If you don't express all that in your start, you do nothing at all.

TILB. Well, we'll try again !

DANG. Speaking from within has always a fine effect.

SNEER. Very.

“WHISK. My conquering Tilburina ! How ! is't thus We meet ? Why are thy looks averse ? what means

That falling tear—that frown of boding woe ?

Ha ! now indeed I am a prisoner !

Yes, now I feel the galling weight of these Disgraceful chains—which, cruel Tilburina !

Thy doting captive gloried in before.

But thou art false, and Whiskerandos is undone!

TILB. Oh no! how little dost thou know thy Tilburina!

WHISK. Art thou, then, true? Begone cares, doubts, and fears,

I make you all a present to the winds;
And if the winds reject you—try the waves."

PUFF. The wind, you know, is the established receiver of all stolen sighs and cast-off griefs and apprehensions.

"TILB. Yet must we part!—stern duty seals our doom:

Though here I call yon conscious clouds to witness,

Could I pursue the bias of my soul,
All friends, all right of parents, I'd disclaim,
And thou, my Whiskerandos, shouldst be father,

And mother, brother, cousin, uncle, aunt,
And friend to me!

WHISK. Oh, matchless excellence! and must we part?
Well, if—we must—we must—and in that case
The less is said the better."

PUFF. Heyday! here's a cut! What, are all the mutual protestations out?

TILB. Now pray, sir, don't interrupt us just here: you ruin our feelings.

PUFF. Your feelings!—but zounds, my feelings, ma'am!

SNEER. No; pray don't interrupt them.

“ WHISK. One last!embrace.

TILB. Now—farewell, for ever.

WHISK. For ever!

TILB. Ay, for ever! [Going.”

PUFF. 'Sdeath and fury! Gad's life! sir! madam! if you go out without the parting look, you might as well dance out. Here, here!

CON. But pray, sir, how am I to get off here?

PUFF. You! psha! what the devil signifies how you get off! Edge away at the top, or where you will. [Pushes the CONFIDANTE off.] Now, ma'am, you see——

TILB. We understand you, sir.

“ Ay, for ever.

BOTH. Oh! [Turning back and exeunt. Scene closes.”]

DANG. Oh, charming!

PUFF. Hey!—'tis pretty well, I believe: you see, I don't attempt to strike out anything new—but I take it I improve on the established modes.

SNEER. You do, indeed! But, pray, is not Queen Elizabeth to appear?

PUFF. No, not once—but she is to be talked of for ever; so that, egad, you'll think a hundred times that she is on the point of coming in.

SNEER. Hang it, I think it's a pity to keep her in the green-room all the night.

PUFF. Oh no, that always has a fine effect—it keeps up expectation.

DANG. But are we not to have a battle?

PUFF. Yes, yes, you will have a battle at last; but, egad, it's not to be by land, but by sea—and that is the only quite new thing in the piece.

DANG. What, Drake at the Armada, hey?

PUFF. Yes, i' faith—fire-ships and all; then we shall end with the procession. Hey, that will do, I think?

SNEER. No doubt on't.

PUFF. Come, we must not lose time; so now for the under-plot.

SNEER. What the plague, have you another plot?

PUFF. O Lord! yes; ever while you live have two plots to your tragedy. The grand point in managing them is only to let your under-plot have as little connection with your main-plot as possible. I flatter myself nothing can be more distinct than mine; for as in my chief plot the characters are all great people, I have laid my under-plot in low life; and as the former is to end in deep distress, I make the other end as happy as a farce. Now, Mr. Hopkins, as soon as you please.

Enter UNDER PROMPTER.

UND. PROMP. Sir, the carpenter says it is impossible you can go to the park scene yet.

PUFF. The park scene! no! I mean the description scene here, in the wood.

UND. PROMP. Sir, the performers have cut it out.

PUFF. Cut it out!

UND. PROMP. Yes, sir.

PUFF. What! the whole account of Queen Elizabeth?

UND. PROMP. Yes, sir.

PUFF. And the description of her horse and side-saddle?

UND. PROMP. Yes, sir.

PUFF. So, so; this is very fine indeed! Mr. Hopkins, how the plague could you suffer this?

MR. HOP. [Within.] Sir, indeed the pruning-knife——

PUFF. The pruning-knife—zounds!—the axe! Why, here has been such lopping and topping, I shan't have the bare trunk of my play left presently! Very well, sir—the performers must do as they please; but, upon my soul, I'll print it every word.

SNEER. That I would, indeed.

PUFF. Very well, sir; then we must go on.—Zounds! I would not have parted with the description of the horse!—Well, sir, go on.—Sir, it was one of the finest and most laboured things.—Very well, sir; let them go on.—There you had him and his accoutrements, from the bit to the crupper.—Very well, sir; we must go to the park scene.

UND. PROMP. Sir, there is the point: the carpenters say, that unless there is some business put in here before the drop, they shan't have time to clear away the fort, or sink Gravesend and the river.

PUFF. So! this is a pretty dilemma, truly!

Gentlemen, you must excuse me—these fellows will never be ready, unless I go and look after them myself.

SNEER. Oh dear, sir, these little things will happen.

PUFF. To cut out this scene!—but I'll print it—egad, I'll print it every word! [Exeunt.

ACT THE THIRD.

SCENE I.

The Theatre, before the Curtain.

Enter PUFF, SNEER, and DANGLE.

PUFF. Well, we are ready; now then, for the justices. [Curtain rises.

“JUSTICES, CONSTABLES, &c., discovered.”

SNEER. This, I suppose, is a sort of senate scene?

PUFF. To be sure; there has not been one yet.

DANG. It is the under-plot, isn't it?

PUFF. Yes. What, gentlemen, do you mean to go at once to the discovery scene?

JUST. If you please, sir.

PUFF. Oh, very well! Hark'ee, I don't choose to say anything more; but, i' faith, they have mangled my play in a most shocking manner.

DANG. It's a great pity!

PUFF. Now then, Mr. Justice, if you please.

“JUST. Are all the volunteers without?

CONST. They are.

Some ten in fetters, and some twenty drunk.

JUST. Attends the youth, whose most opprobrious
fame

And clear convicted crimes have stamp'd him soldier?

CONST. He waits your pleasure; eager to repay
The blest reprieve that sends him to the fields
Of glory, there to raise his branded hand
In honour's cause.

JUST. 'Tis well—'tis justice arms him!

Oh! may he now defend his country's laws

With half the spirit he has broke them all!

If 'tis your worship's pleasure, bid him enter.

CONST. I fly, the herald of your will. [Exit.]

PUFF. Quick, sir.

SNEER. But, Mr. Puff, I think not only the Justice, but the clown seems to talk in as high a style as the first hero among them.

PUFF. Heaven forbid they should not in a free country! Sir, I am not for making slavish distinctions, and giving all the fine language to the upper sort of people.

DANG. That's very noble in you, indeed.

“Enter JUSTICE's LADY.”

PUFF. Now, pray mark this scene.

“LADY. Forgive this interruption, good my love;
But as I just now pass'd a prisoner youth,

Whom rude hands hither lead, strange bodings seized

My fluttering heart, and to myself I said,
An if our Tom had lived, he'd surely been
This stripling's height !

JUST. Ha ! sure some powerful sympathy directs Us both——

Re-enter CONSTABLE with SON.

What is thy name ?

SON. My name is Tom Jenkins—alias have I none—
Though orphan'd, and without a friend !

JUST. Thy parents ?

SON. My father dwelt in Rochester—and was,
As I have heard, a fishmonger—no more.”

PUFF. What, sir, do you leave out the account of your birth, parentage, and education ?

SON. They have settled it so, sir, here.

PUFF. Oh ! oh !

“LADY. How loudly nature whispers to my heart !
Had he no other name ?

SON. I've seen a bill
Of his sign'd Tomkins, creditor.

JUST. This does indeed confirm each circumstance
The gipsy told ! Prepare !

SON. I do.

JUST. No orphan, nor without a friend art thou—
I am thy father ; here's thy mother ; there Thy uncle—this thy first cousin, and those
Are all your near relations !

LADY. O ecstasy of bliss !

SON. O most unlook'd for happiness !

JUST. O wonderful event !

[They faint alternately in each other's arms.]

PUFF. There, you see relationship, like murder, will out.

"JUST. Now let's revive—else were this joy too much !
But come—and we'll unfold the rest within ;
And thou, my boy, must needs want rest and food.

Hence may each orphan hope, as chance directs,
To find a father—where he least expects !

[Exeunt."]

PUFF. What do you think of that ?

DANG. One of the finest discovery-scenes I ever saw ! Why, this under-plot would have made a tragedy itself.

SNEER. Ay, or a comedy either.

PUFF. And keeps quite clear, you see, of the other.

" Enter SCENEMAN, taking away the seats."

PUFF. The scene remains, does it ?

SCENEMAN. Yes, sir.

PUFF. You have to leave one chair, you know. But it is always awkward, in a tragedy, to have you fellows coming in in your playhouse liveries to remove things. I wish that could be managed better. So now for my mysterious yeoman.

" Enter BEEFEATER.

BEEF. Perdition catch my soul, but I do love thee."

SNEER. Haven't I heard that line before ?

PUFF. No, I fancy not. Where, pray ?

DANG. Yes, I think there is something like it in "Othello."

PUFF. Gad! now you put me in mind on't, I believe there is—but that's of no consequence; all that can be said is, that two people happened to hit on the same thought—and Shakespeare made use of it first, that's all.

SNEER. Very true.

PUFF. Now, sir, your soliloquy—but speak more to the pit, if you please—the soliloquy always to the pit, that's a rule.

“BEEF. Though hopeless love finds comfort in despair,
It never can endure a rival's bliss!
But soft—I am observed. [Exit.”

DANG. That's a very short soliloquy.

PUFF. Yes—but it would have been a' great deal longer if he had not been observed.

SNEER. A most sentimental Beefeater that, Mr. Puff!

PUFF. Hark'ee—I would not have you be too sure that he is a Beefeater.

SNEER. What, a hero in disguise?

PUFF. No matter—I only give you a hint. But now for my principal character. Here he comes—Lord Burleigh in person! Pray, gentlemen, step this way—softly—I only hope the Lord High Treasurer is perfect—if he is but perfect!

“Enter LORD BURLEIGH, goes slowly to a chair, and sits.”

SNEER. Mr. Puff!

PUFF. Hush! Vastly well, sir! vastly well!—a most interesting gravity!

DANG. What, isn't he to speak at all?

PUFF. Egad, I thought you'd ask me that! Yes, it is a very likely thing—that a minister in his situation, with the whole affairs of the nation on his head, should have time to talk! But hush! or you'll put him out.

SNEER. Put him out! how the plague can that be, if he's not going to say anything?

PUFF. There's the reason! Why, his part is to think; and how the plague do you imagine he can think if you keep talking?

DANG. That's very true, upon my word!

“LORD BURLEIGH comes forward, shakes his head, and exit.”

SNEER. He is very perfect indeed! Now, pray, what did he mean by that?

PUFF. You don't take it?

SNEER. No, I don't, upon my soul.

PUFF. Why, by that shake of the head, he gave you to understand that even though they had more justice in their cause, and wisdom in their measures—yet, if there was not a greater spirit shown on the part of the people, the country would at last fall a sacrifice to the hostile ambition of the Spanish monarchy.

SNEER. The devil! did he mean all that by shaking his head?

PUFF. Every word of it—if he shook his head as I taught him.

DANG. Ah! there certainly is a vast deal to be done on the stage by dumb show and expression of face; and a judicious author knows how much he may trust to it.

SNEER. Oh, here are some of our old acquaintance.

“Enter SIR CHRISTOPHER HATTON and SIR WALTER RALEIGH.

SIR CHRIST. My niece and your niece too!

By Heaven! there's witchcraft in't. He could not else

Have gain'd their hearts. But see where they approach:

Some horrid purpose lowering on their brows!

SIR WALT. Let us withdraw and mark them.

[They withdraw.”]

SNEER. What is all this?

PUFF. Ah! here has been more pruning!—but the fact is, these two young ladies are also in love with Don Whiskerandos. Now, gentlemen, this scene goes entirely for what we call situation and stage effect, by which the greatest applause may be obtained, without the assistance of language, sentiment, or character: pray mark!

“Enter the two NIECES.

1ST NIECE. Ellena here!

She is his scorn as much as I—that is Some comfort still!”

PUFF. Oh dear, madam, you are not to say that to her face!—aside, ma'am, aside. The whole scene is to be aside.

“1ST NIECE. She is his scorn as much as I—that is Some comfort still. [Aside.

2ND NIECE. I know he prizes not Pollina's love ;
But Tilburina lords it o'er his heart. [Aside.

1ST NIECE. But see the proud destroyer of my peace.
Revenge is all the good I've left. [Aside.

2ND NIECE. He comes, the false disturber of my quiet.
Now, vengeance do thy worst. [Aside.

Enter DON FEROLLO WHISKERANDOS.

WHISK. Oh, hateful liberty—if thus in vain
I seek my Tilburina !

BOTH NIECES. And ever shalt !

SIR CHRISTOPHER HATTON and SIR WALTER RALEIGH come forward.

SIR CHRIST. and SIR WALT. Hold ! we will avenge you.

WHISK. Hold you—or see your nieces bleed !

[The two NIECES draw their two daggers to strike WHISKERANDOS : the two UNCLES at the instant, with their two swords drawn, catch their two NIECES' arms, and turn the points of their swords to WHISKERANDOS, who immediately draws two daggers, and holds them to the two NIECES' bosoms.”

PUFF. There's situation for you ! there's an heroic group ! You see, the ladies can't stab Whiskerandos—he durst not strike them, for fear of their uncles—the uncles durst not kill him, because of their nieces. I have them all at a deadlock!—for every one of them is afraid to let go first.

SNEER. Why, then, they must stand there for ever!

PUFF. So they would, if I hadn't a very fine contrivance for't. Now mind——

“Enter BEEFEATER with his halberd.”

BEEF. In the queen's name I charge you all to drop

Your swords and daggers!

[They drop their swords and daggers.]

SNEER. That is a contrivance, indeed!

PUFF. Ay—in the queen's name.

“SIR CHRIST. Come, niece!

SIR WALT. Come, niece! [Exeunt with the two NIECES.

WHISK. What's he, who bids us thus renounce our guard?

BEEF. Thou must do more—renounce thy love!

WHISK. Thou liest—base Beefeater!

BEEF. Ha! hell! the lie!

By Heaven thou'st roused the lion in my heart!

Off, yeoman's habit!—base disguise! off! off!

[Discovers himself by throwing off his upper dress, and appearing in a very fine waistcoat.]

Am I a Beefeater now?

Or beams my crest as terrible as when

In Biscay's Bay I took thy captive sloop?”

PUFF. There, egad! he comes out to be the very captain of the privateer who had taken Whisker-andos prisoner—and was himself an old lover of Tilburina's.

DANG. Admirably managed, indeed!

PUFF. Now, stand out of their way.

“WHISK. I thank thee, Fortune, that hast thus bestowed

A weapon to chastise this insolent.

[Takes up one of the swords.]

BEEF. I take thy challenge, Spaniard, and I thank thee,

Fortune, too! [Takes up the other sword.”]

DANG. That’s excellently contrived! It seems as if the two uncles had left their swords on purpose for them.

PUFF. No, egad, they could not help leaving them.

“WHISK. Vengeance and Tilburina!

BEEF.

Exactly so——

[They fight—and after the usual number of wounds given, WHISKERANDOS falls.]

WHISK. O cursèd parry!—that last thrust in tierce
Was fatal. Captain, thou hast fencèd well!
And Whiskerandos quits this bustling scene
For all eter——

BEEF.

——nity—he would have added, but stern death

Cut short his being, and the noun at once!”

PUFF. Oh, my dear sir, you are too slow: now mind me. Sir, shall I trouble you to die again?

“WHISK. And Whiskerandos quits this bustling scene
For all eter——

BEEF.

——nity—he would have added——”

PUFF. No, sir—that's not it—once more, if you please.

WHISK. I wish, sir, you would practise this without me—I can't stay dying here all night.

PUFF. Very well; we'll go over it by-and-by. [Exit WHISKERANDOS.] I must humour these gentlemen!

“BEEF. Farewell, brave Spaniard! and when next——”

PUFF. Dear sir, you needn't speak that speech, as the body has walked off.

BEEF. That's true, sir—then I'll join the fleet.

PUFF. If you please. [Exit BEEFEATER.] Now, who comes on?

“Enter GOVERNOR, with his hair properly disordered.”

Gov. A hemisphere of evil planets reign!

And every planet sheds contagious frenzy!

My Spanish prisoner is slain! my daughter,

Meeting the dead corpse borne along, has gone

Distract! [A loud flourish of trumpets.]

But hark! I am summon'd to the fort:

Perhaps the fleets have met! amazing crisis!

O Tilburina! from thy aged father's beard

Thou'st pluck'd the few brown hairs which time had left! [Exit.”]

SNEER. Poor gentleman!

PUFF. Yes—and no one to blame but his daughter!

DANG. And the planets——

PUFF. True. Now enter Tilburina!

SNEER. Egad, the business comes on quick here.

PUFF. Yes, sir—now she comes in stark mad in white satin.

SNEER. Why in white satin?

PUFF. O Lord! sir—when a heroine goes mad, she always goes into white satin. Don't she, Dangle?

DANG. Always—it's a rule.

PUFF. Yes—here it is. [Looking at the book.]
“Enter Tilburina stark mad in white satin, and her confidante stark mad in white linen.”

“Enter TILBURINA and CONFIDANTE, mad, according to custom.”

SNEER. But, what the deuce! is the confidante to be mad too?

PUFF. To be sure she is: the confidante is always to do whatever her mistress does; weep when she weeps, smile when she smiles, go mad when she goes mad. Now, madam confidante—but keep your madness in the background, if you please.

“TILB. The wind whistles—the moon rises—see,
They have kill'd my squirrel in his cage!
Is this a grasshopper! Ha! no; it is my Whiskerandos—you shall not keep him—
I know you have him in your pocket—
An oyster may be cross'd in love! Who says
A whale's a bird? Ha! did you call, my love?
He's here! he's there! He's everywhere!
Ah me! he's nowhere! [Exit.”

PUFF. There, do you ever desire to see anybody madder than that?

SNEER. Never, while I live!

PUFF. You observed how she mangled the metre?

DANG. Yes—egad, it was the first thing made me suspect she was out of her senses!

SNEER. And, pray, what becomes of her?

PUFF. She is gone to throw herself into the sea, to be sure—and that brings us at once to the scene of action, and so to my catastrophe—my sea-fight, I mean.

SNEER. What, you bring that in at last?

PUFF. Yes, yes—you know my play is called “The Spanish Armada”; otherwise, egad, I have no occasion for the battle at all. Now then, for my magnificence!—my battle!—my noise!—and my procession! You are all ready?

UND. PROMP. [Within.] Yes, sir.

PUFF. Is the Thames dressed?

“Enter THAMES with two ATTENDANTS.”

THAMES. Here I am, sir.

PUFF. Very well, indeed! See, gentlemen, there’s a river for you! This is blending a little of the masque with my tragedy—a new fancy, you know—and very useful in my case; for as there must be a procession, I suppose Thames, and all his tributary rivers, to compliment Britannia with a fête in honour of the victory.

SNEER. But, pray, who are these gentlemen in green with him?

PUFF. Those?—those are his banks.

SNEER. His banks?

PUFF. Yes, one crowned with alders, and the other with a villa!—you take the allusions? But hey! what the plague! you have got both your banks on one side. Here, sir, come round. Ever while you live, Thames, go between your banks. [Bell rings.] There, so! now for't! Stand aside, my dear friends! Away, Thames!

[Exit THAMES between his banks.

[Flourish of drums, trumpets, cannon, &c. &c. Scene changes to the sea—the fleets engage—the music plays “Britons strike home.” Spanish fleet destroyed by fire-ships, &c. English fleet advances—music plays “Rule Britannia.” The procession of all the English rivers, and their tributaries, with their emblems, &c., begins with Handel’s water music, ends with a chorus, to the march in “Judas Maccabæus.” During this scene, PUFF directs and applauds everything—then—

PUFF. Well, pretty well—but not quite perfect. So, ladies and gentlemen, if you please, we’ll rehearse this piece again to-morrow. [Curtain drops.
